The entrenched camp at Nava

How to get there

Leaving from Imperia in the south (approximately 35 km away) and Ormea in the north (in the province of Cuneo, approximately 8 km away), you take the S.S. no.28 until you reach Località Case di Nava, in the municipality of Pornassio, a practical centre for visiting a number of forts.

The entrenched camp at Nava

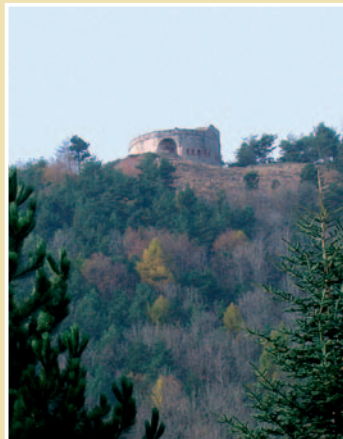

An entrenched camp was built between 1880 and 1888 in order to control the strategic Col di Nava and prevent any French troops that happened to land on the coast close to Imperia from reaching Piedmont and the Po Valley along the road from Oneglia to Ormea.

The central fort and the Bellarasco fort, both sited on the col, acted as the pivotal points in the structure, flanked on the right by the Pozzanghi and Montescio fortifications and on the left by the Richelmo fortification. The formation was completed by the semi-permanent batteries of Monte Ariolo, San Lorenzo and Poggio Forche.

In addition to the col itself, the firing range of the batteries also covered the valleys and side paths, which, when combined with the range of the Saccarello and Zuccarello fortifications, created an almost continuous line of defence along the Ligurian Alps.
